Consisting of six parishes and two major cities, the Lafayette Metro region is ripe for economic opportunity.

With established regional infrastructure — like the Lafayette Regional Airport, Port of Iberia and major interstates I-10 and I-49 — and a large pool of 50-200+ acre industrial sites available for development, the groundwork has been laid for major operations. Like, this region's booming food processing and metal production industries. Need talent? Lafayette has one of the largest talent pool in targeted industries such as engineering, computer & information sciences and manufacturing & production. Each year, the University of Louisiana at Lafayette graduates thousands of students in the state's most targeted industries.
